Here is a new code of ethics, said to have been promulgated by the National League, the object being to elevate the game to the social status of golf, tiddlede-winks and lawn tennis, and impart that recherche tone which has long been lacking: while and lawn tennis, and impart that recherche tone which has long been incking:

Rule 1.—Field captains and thirty-third degree kickers must refrain from altering the natural expression of an umpire's features in the presence of the populace. To convey an air of correct St. Louis, Mo., the Mafia should entice said umpire into the dressing room after the game, pull a bat hag over his head and imprint a series of swift kicks. For authority on this point see the case of Latham et al. vs. Sheridan on Thursday, April 23, 1806.

Rule 2.—Mixed-ale language reflecting on the habits and character of annual pass-holders who intimate by word of mouth that the performance of a player is in an advanced stage of decomposition can be taken as conclusive endence that the offender is hopelessiy Walla Walla, Wash. It is much better to tell the critic in placid accents that he is bughouse, whatever that may be.

Rule 3.—Winning pitchers, unless they wish to be branded as irredeemably Omaha, Neb., should avoid grooming a bright new ball on the slack breadths of their bloomers before submitting it to the bataman. Such procedure is not only heartless, but exceedingly Battle Creek, Mich., as well. Unlicensed endeavor to put good men out of the basiness cannot be tolerated. The ball at best is practically invisible to some of them, particularly the most pronounced New

Rule 4.—No League player can be too Baltimore, Md. For instance, when a batsman with an average of .872 dodges into a wild pitch or perverted inshoot that loosens his slats, he must not walk around in a gradually decreasing circle with his pallid face upturned to the grand stand, unless the game is taking place at Wilm ington, Del. In this case he is not amonable to

Rule 5.-White-garbed catchers or first basemen, if gifted with the instincts of true Brooklyn, N. Such conduct, while no doubt improving the efficacy of the performer, is now considered too Dubque, Ia., for the big

Rule 7.—When head-end collisions result from enraptured fielders bent on retrieving the same fly ball the victims should not display the least sign of Mobile, Ala., nor seek to inflict further injury. The most Washington, D. C., course is for the young men to assist each other in plucking dislocated teeth from the grass so as not to delay the game.

Boston placed another dab of grease on the toboggan yesterday afternoon, and down our young men slid by a score of 7 to 4.

It has been truthfully said that the hearts of the Giants are not in their work. Well, why don't they swallow those useful organs and smoke up a bit? The secretary announced that three entries had already been received for the navel cutter race, and a fourth one was willing to compete providing they might use their own boat, a barge. This was objected to by the New York crew, who insisted upon the twelve-cared entier rule, but they offer to row any other naval crew with racing boats of their own choice. In order to avoid a repetiation of the protests of last year on the charges of professionalism in the Naval Reserve contest, the Regatta Committee will insist that none but amateurs shall participate. Last year there were forty-three entries in the various events, exclusive of the naval crews and there are now about thirty-five crews on the river known to be in training for this year's regatta.

The next meeting of the association will be held on May 20, at which time the list will close and the entries be made known.

Rowing Notes,

The Seawanhaka Boat Club, of Brooklyn, will make three entries in the Decoration Day regatia of the Harlem River Association—a junior single, a junior double and a light-weight double. Chris O'Connell, who will row in the junior single scull race, has decided to do all his training on the Harlem River, and he has taken his shell up to the Wyanoke Boat Club house, where he will leave it till after the regatta. The Farnam brothers, Will and Rob, will row in the junior doubles, while the light-weight double will be T. Vassler and H. Ahrans. The two doubles practiced from the club house on Sanday, while the rest of the boys spent their time repairing the float. The Nareus and Flushing boat clubs, of Flushing, have both been very backward this season about getting to work on the water. The fact is that neither club has even put out their floats, although the regular Spring opening of the Flushing Club is to take place May 9.
